The house, garage, chicken coups and barn were torn down after his death to make room for new houses. Levy was a farmer who grew and sold vegetables, cattle, milk and eggs to support his family. The most cattle that he every had at one time was 17. He plowed his field behind a mule pulling a plow. He once bought a used tractor to plow the fields but returned back to using the mule pulled plows. When he began drawing social security, he minimized what he grew and raised that sufficient to sustain he and his wife. In 1957, he had a small vegatable garden, three large fig trees, one cow, one calf, and numerous chickens and turkeys. He visited his son Paul and his family in California in 1948. This was after his first wife Alice Bergeron died in 1947. Paul and his family lived in an apartment on School Street in Daly City, a suburb just south of San Francisco. Paul took his father on a tour of northern California to see the petrified forest in Lassen National Park, Shasta Dam and the Redwood Forests along the northern California coast. They also visited Paul's wife Louise's best girlfriend Iona who was the wife of Virgil Eckels who lived in Red Bluff, California. Paul and his family visited Levy in Houma Louisiana once in 1957 and again in 1961. The first time they took the Greyhound bus and the second time they drove a 1958 Ford station wagon which was purchased new in Half Moon Bay California. On both trips, they stopped in Texas both directions and visited with Paul's niece Pie Adams and her family and his nephew Paul Adams and his family. They brought Pie's daughter Sue to and from Louisiana to visit her cousins on the first trip in 1957.
