Last Quick Glimpse Taken in '65 at Acadian Heritage

REMEMBERED

By Claire Proulx

DOUGLASSVILLE, La.

For the next few years of 1965, Louisiana has paid the tribute of appreciation to its Acadian heritage, commemorating the bicentennial of their coming to what has come to be the French Quarter.

They were treated to a few years of忍受, but in the end the Acadians have shown that they were capable of maintaining their culture and identity in Louisiana.

The Acadians, forced to keep their homes and places, have lived up to the poverty they faced and one can only respect their determination to remain in Louisiana and continue their white culture.

The Acadian dating back to the 18th century has become a symbol of resilience and perseverance in the face of adversity.

This year has marked the 200th anniversary of the Acadian heritage in Louisiana, and it has been a celebration of their culture and heritage.
