Acadians in Canada Invite Louisiana Friends to Fete

By Jim LeCelleur

The Acadians are holding a bicentennial celebration in Canada to honor their ancestors who left Louisiana in 1765. The event will take place Aug. 16-18 in the city of Saint John, New Brunswick.

The celebration will include a parade, a concert, and a banquet. The highlight of the event will be the re-enactment of the events that took place when the Acadians left Louisiana.

The Acadians in Canada have invited friends from Louisiana to attend the celebration. They hope to attract many people to the event.

The celebration will begin with a parade through the streets of Saint John. The parade will feature floats, music, and a variety of Acadian-themed costumes.

Following the parade, there will be a concert featuring Acadian music and dance. The concert will be held at the local amphitheater, which is located near the site of the 1765 expedition.

The evening will conclude with a banquet. The banquet will be held at the local hotel and will feature traditional Acadian cuisine. The banquet is open to the public, and tickets are available for purchase.

The Acadians in Canada hope to attract many people to the celebration. They believe that the event will be a great success and will help to strengthen the bond between the two communities.

Dr. George Dumont, a professor at the University of New Brunswick, said, "We are excited to host this celebration and to honor our Acadian heritage. We hope to attract many people to the event and to strengthen the bond between the two communities.

The Acadians in Canada are a vibrant community with a rich history. They have a strong sense of tradition and culture, and they are proud to share this with others.

Our community is located in the beautiful province of New Brunswick, which is known for its stunning scenery and friendly people. We are proud to call this our home, and we welcome everyone to visit and experience our Acadian way of life.

We hope to see you at the celebration, and we look forward to sharing our heritage with you."
The Evangelist (Yamhill County's name for the newspaper for Evangelical Christians) was a monthly, and a Canadian church paper, was publishing and distributing it in the area. The editor, under the supervision of Henry LeBlanc, a former US government official and now the editor of the Marquette Review, presented the paper to the city of Marquette.

The Canadian also ran a considerable number of bicentennial photographs in their newspapers. Among these, a recent one was a photo showing Mayor J. A. Massie of St. Martinville presenting the key to the city to Dr. Deux, who had recently visited the United States.

The Canadian also presented excerpts from the Canadian delegation to the Acadia bicentennial observance, with photographs of the greeting ceremonies at the historic Acadiana. The event was attended by Dr. Deux and several others.

The Marquette Review also published a letter from a reader, who expressed their support for the bicentennial celebration.

The Daily Advertiser, a newspaper based in Acadiana, published an editorial that praised the bicentennial celebration and the efforts of the local community to honor the Acadian heritage.

The article also paid special tribute to Miss Ada Beall, president of the Bicentennial Committee, who was in charge of the bicentennial planning in the town.

The Daily Advertiser also included a letter from a resident who thanked the newspaper for their coverage of the bicentennial celebration.
