Newspapers Record Acadia's Beginning

Ed. Note: The interesting history of early publications by Acadian and French-Canadian chiefs and the importance of newspapers in preserving the heritage of Acadia.

W. W. Dagen in September 1904, when the sugar was moved to the nearby Inspired Times, the Acadia Sentinel began publishing. On September 11, 1904, the first issue was published, featuring stories about local events and personalities. The Sentinel has since become an important voice in the community, covering local news, events, and issues.

In 1905, the Sentinel's editor, W. W. Dagen, was replaced by W. J. Crocker, who continued to publish the newspaper. The new editor brought a fresh perspective to the Sentinel, focusing on local events and issues, while also providing valuable information to the community.

The Sentinel has been a trusted source of news and information for the community for over a century, providing a valuable resource for residents and visitors alike. The Sentinel's commitment to local journalism has helped to preserve the history and culture of Acadia, ensuring that future generations will have access to valuable information about their heritage.
