All Saints Day Renew Interest In Old Cemeteries

On All Saints Day, Nov. 1, a common sight throughout the French-Catholic domain of South Louisiana is the procession of visitors to the many picturesque cemeteries of the cities, towns, villages, and countryside. The crowds will come to mark the anniversary of their loved ones, to visit the graves of their relatives, and to rest a moment in the tranquility of the cemetery.

In the city of New Orleans, where the French-Catholic influence is strongest, the cemeteries are a popular destination. The most famous burial places in New Orleans are the Lafayette Cemetery One, Two, and Three, located in the Marigny neighborhood.

The most famous burial place in New Orleans is Lafayette Cemetery One, which contains the graves of many notable figures from New Orleans history. The cemetery is also known for its beautiful architecture and landscaping.

The next day, All Saints Day, is observed by visiting the graves of loved ones and attending religious services. Many parishes in Louisiana hold special Masses and prayers in honor of the faithful departed.

In rural Louisiana, the cemeteries are also an important part of the community. The cemeteries are usually located at the center of the community, and many families have plots in the cemetery.

On All Souls Day, Nov. 2, the souls of the deceased are remembered. Many families visit the graves of their loved ones and light candles in their memory.
