CHARLES GOODSON

Charles Goodson is the oil industry's most visible and outspoken advocate of higher energy prices. He is the president of the American Petroleum Institute, which represents the interests of oil and gas producers, and he is a key figure in the debate over energy policy.

Goodson has been a vocal supporter of higher energy prices, arguing that they are necessary to ensure the long-term viability of the industry. He has also been a strong advocate for increased domestic energy production, particularly in the United States, where he believes it is crucial to achieve energy independence.

Goodson has been involved in numerous energy-related initiatives, including the creation of the American Petroleum Institute's Energy Policy Task Force, which has developed recommendations for federal energy policy.

BEAU JOQUE

Beau Jaque is a well-known Louisiana politician and former governor. He is known for his strong advocacy of the state's energy industry and his efforts to promote economic development in the state.

Jaque has been a vocal supporter of the oil and gas industry, and he has worked to protect the industry's interests in the legislature and at the federal level. He has also been a strong advocate for the state's energy infrastructure, including its pipelines and natural gas plants.

Jaque's political career has been marked by his support for the energy industry and his efforts to promote economic growth in the state. He has been a strong advocate for the development of new energy sources, including offshore oil and gas, and he has worked to ensure that Louisiana remains a leader in the energy sector.