You need not fly to New York to find them, either. There are some living right here in Lafayette, men and women who will be dressed appropriately for the occasion. They are the people who have attended the event in the past, and who will return again this year.

There are a few things that you should know about the attendees. They are a diverse group, ranging in age from the young to the old, but they all have one thing in common: they have all attended the event before. They are the people who have made it a tradition to attend, and they will do so again this year.

The event is not just for the attendees, however. It is also for the people who have not attended before, but who are interested in attending. They can learn about the event by attending, and they can participate by attending as well. They are the ones who will make it a tradition to attend, and they will do so again next year.

All the President's Men

The University of Louisiana at Lafayette hosted a dramatic unveiling of presidential portraits at the Edith Garland Dupré Library. Hosted by the UL-Lafayette Foundation Board of Trustees, the Champagne reception and speeches officially welcomed the likenesses of Edwin Stephens, Lether Frazar, Joel Fletcher Jr., Clyde Rougeou and Ray Authement. Created by artist Janine Collins, the portraits commemorate past university presidents from 1900 through 2008 and reflect the era and accomplishments of each. Heralding their arrival were Joseph and Gail Savoie, Herbert and Renee Schilling, incoming Foundation Chairman Joe Giglio Jr., athletic director Bryan Maggard and wife Kerry and emcee for the evening Wayne Elmore. Guests left with individually-wrapped acorn pins, a simple reminder of growth and strength.
The Right Stuff
This event certainly had it. The Paul and Lulu Hilliard University Art Museum kicked off its fall exhibitions with a VIP cocktail party. There was rosé, chardonnay, Vodka Ritas and more as fall’s first cold front brought out the art elites to hear remarks by director LouAnne Greenwald and curator Laura Blereau. Artist Joan Tanner autographed books in honor of her exhibit, CONTINGENT while across the way, “Crafting the Louisiana Sound” opened in the A. Hays Town building, courtesy of Anya Burgess and Chris Segura. Taking it all in were Brett and Donna Mellington, David and Julie Fox, Raoul Blanco, Aaron Martin, concert pianist Chan Kiat Lim and retired visual arts professor Lynda Frese, soon to be holding some events of her own, we’re told. What we loved: May Waggoner’s silver statement necklace and the sweet pork sausage that was passed around, a culinary statement of its own.
