NEW IBERIA - Bayou Teche, which meanders through bayouland Louisiana, remains almost as subdued as it was during the earliest days of the state. In its quiet rush, the river is a reminder of a simpler time when the land was unspoiled.

The river is a symbol of the Acadian heritage, which is particularly evident in the area. Many of the homes along the bayou are built entirely of virgin cypress - cut as it was strong and brought to the site of the house.

Whether the river is wide or narrow, its tranquility is undisturbed. The bayou is a place of beauty and peace, a place where one can escape from the hustle and bustle of modern life.
