Chapter Three

JANUARY TENTH, 1913.-Our camp was made up in the same way that a good-sized army camp must be. We had to make it last a whole year, and we had to do it as quietly as possible.

One of the first things we did was to build a fence around the entire camp. This fence was about ten feet high and ran all the way around the camp, except for a small gate in the middle of it. We also put up a sign that read, "No Trespassing!"

The next thing we did was to plant trees. We planted several maple trees, an apple tree, and a cherry tree. We also put up a fence around the trees to keep people from slipping and falling on them.

The trees were very healthy and they grew very fast. By the time the spring came, they were big enough to shade the camp from the sun. This was important because the sun was very hot in January, and we didn't want anyone to get sunburned.

We also put up a sign that said, "No Trespassing!" and we made sure that everyone followed it. We didn't want anyone to slip and fall on the trees.

THE STATES-ITEM