BOUCHERIE

Back in the days of refrigeration, something which brought families closer together was the “boucherie” or the “boucherie de campagne.” The men from several families in neighboring farms would get together on Saturdays and butcher their hogs and cattle for the next week. The families would take turns in going to different farms each week, and sometimes as many as 24 families would come together for the “boucherie” and make it an all day activity.