Carl Blyth, a professor at Loyola, teaches a class on Cajun culture. His students have the opportunity to learn about the culture through a variety of methods including literature, music, and dance. Blyth believes that it is important to preserve the culture of Cajun people and that his students have a unique opportunity to do so. He hopes to continue teaching this class and to see it grow in popularity.