Here is a list of the breweries (with addresses) in New Orleans before World War I, compiled by William J. Oberhelman Sr. and provided us through the courtesy of Dixie Brewing:

- Union (Press and Robertson)
- Regal (Bienville and Chartres)
- New Orleans (Jackson and Tchoupitoulas)
- National (purchased by Falstaff after Prohibition)
- Jackson (present location)
- Columbia (Elysian Fields and Chartres)
- Weckerling (Howard and Magazine)
- Pelican (St. Louis and N. Villere)
- Security (Algiers)
- Consumers (Liberty and Clio)
- Dixie (present location)
- Citizens (Claiborne and Canal)
- Standard (521 S. Prieur)

Mr. Oberhelman’s son also provided these notes of his father’s recollections of the old beer scene:

“Standard beer was called ‘Worth Braw.’ Citizens Brewery, located where a Ford automobile dealership (Casey Ford) is now located, closed sometime around or shortly after 1900. Weckerling was purchased by New Orleans Brewery which then operated two plants. After repeal of the Volstead Act, the following breweries reopened: Union, Regal, New Orleans, Falstaff, Dixie, Jax and Standard. ‘XXXX’ (‘Four X’) is the trade name of beer brewed by New Orleans Brewery.

“Prior to World War I, Anheuser-Busch shipped beer to New Orleans. The distributorship was located at Gravier and Front Streets. Dad does not recall if Schlitz shipped beer at that time.”
