Local Student

The Lafayette newspaper recently ran a story about Jack, a local student who has been involved in various community service projects. Jack, who is a senior at the University of Southern California, is currently working as a volunteer at a local charity organization. He recently spoke to the Lafayette Student Council about his experiences and the importance of community service.

Jack explained that he first became interested in community service when he was a young boy. His parents were very active in volunteering and would often take him along to their events. He began volunteering regularly in high school and has continued to do so throughout his college career.

Jack's current project is focused on providing meals to children in need. He is working with a local food bank to ensure that meals are delivered to children who may not have access to proper nutrition. Jack explained that this project is very meaningful to him, as he has seen the positive impact that food can have on a child's life.

Jack's story is just one example of the many ways in which students can give back to their community. The Lafayette Student Council encourages all students to get involved in community service and make a difference in their local community.
