Côngrès promises revelations about Acadian cultures

LAFAYETTE — The 600th of the Acadians from Nova Scotia in 1820 set into the greatest population expansion of a people in any country that had ever occurred. Over the next 120 years, they multiplied to more than 500,000 people, and they were the first to become a great culture in Louisiana.

But the people who came here from the New World in the early 19th century were not the same. They had a culture that was very different from the French culture they came from. They were from the British colonies, and they brought with them a different way of life.

There are people here who can you understand what Acadian culture was in the first place. They are descendants of the Acadians who came to Louisiana. Many of them have family members who are descendants of the Acadians who came to Louisiana.

One of the stories that is told is that the Acadians were the first to arrive in Louisiana. They were followed by the French, who came later and settled in the area.

This is a story that is told as a way of thanking those people who came here.
