Cultural Relation To Religion Aired At Lafayette Meet

"To Related to Different Cultures," was discussed by the Rev. Joseph F. Hannon, S.J., speaking at the Catholic Student Center of the Catholic University of America. The meeting was attended by the President of the Student Council, Dr. John B. Keating, and other members of the faculty and staff.

The Rev. Father, head of the department of sociology at St. John's University, introduced the discussion of "Cultural Relations" by Dr. E. F. Keating, professor of sociology at St. John's University. He pointed out that a study of this subject is important because it is a study of the culture of a people who are different from our own.

The discussion centered around the idea that within the culture there are certain values that are held in common. These values are often referred to as "American ways." The discussion also centered around the idea that these values are not static, but are subject to change and development.

It was pointed out that the American way is not simply a set of values that are held in common by all Americans. It is a way of life that is unique to the American people.

The discussion also centered around the idea that the American way is unique because it is a way of life that is unique to the American people. It is a way of life that is unique because it is a way of life that is unique to the American people. It is a way of life that is unique because it is a way of life that is unique to the American people. It is a way of life that is unique because it is a way of life that is unique to the American people.
