Festive Celebration Today Marks Arrival Of Acadians

By EUGENE MADS

Anniversary of Acadian Foundation, which was 300 years ago, will be marked by an array of events at the University of Southern California today. The festivities will include a parade, a pageant, and a concert.

The parade will begin at 10 a.m. and proceed through the campus. Participants will include students, faculty, and staff of the university, as well as representatives from the local community.

The pageant, scheduled for 2 p.m., will be held on the campus lawn and will feature a cast of hundreds. The performance will tell the story of the Acadian exodus and its impact on the history of the United States.

A concert, set for 8 p.m., will take place in the university's Coliseum. The program will include music and dance performances by students and faculty members. The concert will also feature a special performance by a group of musicians who have played a significant role in the Acadian exodus.

The festivities are expected to draw thousands of participants and spectators. The university has put significant effort into planning and organizing the event, and is excited to share this history with the community.
