CAPT. J. ROY FAULK (left), commanding officer of the New Orleans Naval Air Station, and Cmdr. Gordon E. Dugal Jr., commanding officer of the Navy Patrol Squadron VP-94, admire the squadron’s insignia, the fighting Louisiana crawfish. The squadron, formed in 1970, adopted the crawfish symbol because of the large number of French Acadian names of its members and because it is an easily identifiable one for the people of Louisiana. The insignia shows an angry crawfish, with its body covering part of the state of Louisiana, crushing a submarine between its claws.
