QUEBEC - A worldwide organization of French-speaking countries may hold its next annual conference in Lafayette, La., but plans are tentative, according to James Domengeaux, chairman of the Council for the Development of French in Louisiana (CODOFIL).

Domengeaux made the comment Saturday after learning that the Associated Press had reported the conference would be held. The AP story did not make clear the tentative nature of the arrangements.

Domengeaux was with a three-man Louisiana delegation in Quebec attending the second annual conference of the French Cultural and Technical Cooperation Agency, an association of about 30 French-speaking nations.

Domengeaux confirmed that the agency has offered to help fund the next conference and has offered to hold it in Lafayette in April, 1972. Some 1,000 persons would attend. And the agency would put up "much more" than $6,000 as was previously reported, he said, stressing the tentative nature of the plans.

"Louisiana is very honored at the officer, but CODOFIL, which has the responsibility for arrangements, must first determine whether we have the resources for holding such a conference," he said.

"We are very much in favor of it," he said, promising to announce later whether Louisiana will definitely host the event.
