Frenchman visits USL to learn about culture

To learn more about the Acadian cultural traditions and the Acadian movement toward the construction of the French language in this part of the United States, Jean Pierre Leng, a French national and a civil servant in the office of a French commissioner to the European Common Market, visited last week on the USL campus and in Lafayette.

Leng spoke on the policies and prospects of the European economic community to a university class taught by Dr. Philip Dar, USL political science professor. He said that negotiations for entry of the United Kingdom, Ireland, Denmark and Norway are being actively pursued at the present time and that there is general agreement among common market countries to permit their entry into the Common Market.

The main issue is whether Great Britain is willing to make the economic adjustments necessary for her to enter as a full member of the European Common Market.
