She described the young people she had met in Lafayette as "very polite. Manners have deteriorated in France, perhaps because it is an older civilization. The young people there are more blase."

The dignitary's daughter plans to pursue further studies in political science when she completes her law degree at the University of Paris. She intends to someday go into the political world, but as yet is not sure which branch of it she will enter.

Miss Vivien, who leaves tomorrow to return home, says she hopes to visit America again in the near future.

"Lafayette is more fun than Paris. I prefer to be here. There are more places for young people to go," says Miss Dominique Viven of the city where for the last week she has been visiting in the home of the James Domengeaux.

Miss Vivien is the daughter of the Secretary of Housing in the cabinet of France. Her father met Domengeaux, the Chairman of the Council for the Development of French in Louisiana, when he came to USL last year to make an official survey of French culture in this area.

"The people in France are political," criticized French students who put their studies aside and just concentrated on politics.

"Their only influence is a negative one. It is not that their ideas are good or bad, but that they have no ideas at all. They just disturb the peace and make no constructive suggestions," she explained.

Lafayette More Fun Than Paris

"Lafayette is more fun than Paris. I prefer to be here. There are more places for young people to go," says Miss Dominique Viven of the city where for the last week she has been visiting in the home of the James Domengeaux.

Miss Vivien is the daughter of the Secretary of Housing in the cabinet of France. Her father met Domengeaux, the Chairman of the Council for the Development of French in Louisiana, when he came to USL last year to make an official survey of French culture in this area.

"The people in France are political," criticized French students who put their studies aside and just concentrated on politics.

"Their only influence is a negative one. It is not that their ideas are good or bad, but that they have no ideas at all. They just disturb the peace and make no constructive suggestions," she explained.

This is Miss Vivien's first visit to America. Prior to coming to Lafayette, she saw New York and several other large cities. Of Acadia she says, "It is so different here from the rest of the United States. Everything is so green and the bayous are so beautiful."