A Link to the Glorious Old South

Gov. T. O. Moore
A Brief Background

By EDNA F. CAMPBELL

A bronze roadside plaque at the side of Louisiana Highway 46 near the present Tangipahoa Bridge marks the site of Louisiana's Revolutionary War and Civil War era, presenting a pleasing picture of the state's history. The museum, located on Highway 51, is easily available to passing motorists. In 1907 a majestic monument was erected on the grounds adjoining Camp Moore. Now in its final lap of completion, the museum, located on Highway 51, is easily available to passing motorists. The bronze roadside plaque of the state's history is a perfect place for tourists to stop and learn more about Louisiana's history and culture.

The governor left Camp Moore in September 1862, and, according to Moore's memoirs, he was about 56 years old. He then returned to his home in the Tangipahoa area and began to serve as police juror in the town of St. John's, a position he held for two years. In 1865, Moore was elected to the Louisiana Senate as a member of the Democratic Party. He served for four years and was re-elected in 1866. Moore was a member of the Louisiana House of Representatives from 1867 to 1868. He was again elected to the Louisiana House in 1872 and served another two-year term.

In 1870, Moore was elected as the first mayor of Tangipahoa. He served for two years, and in 1872, he was elected to the Louisiana House of Representatives. In 1873, he was elected as the first mayor of Tangipahoa. He served for two years, and in 1875, he was elected to the Louisiana Senate.

A Link to the Glorious Old South

Gov. Moore was made before Civil War

By EDNA F. CAMPBELL

This portrait of Gov. Moore was made before Civil War with Gov. Blanchard receiving the award of memory for the state's history. The bronze roadside plaque of the state's history is a perfect place for tourists to stop and learn more about Louisiana's history and culture.

The governor left Camp Moore in September 1862, and, according to Moore's memoirs, he was about 56 years old. He then returned to his home in the Tangipahoa area and began to serve as police juror in the town of St. John's, a position he held for two years. In 1865, Moore was elected to the Louisiana Senate as a member of the Democratic Party. He served for four years and was re-elected in 1866. Moore was a member of the Louisiana House of Representatives from 1867 to 1868. He was again elected to the Louisiana House in 1872 and served another two-year term.

In 1870, Moore was elected as the first mayor of Tangipahoa. He served for two years, and in 1872, he was elected to the Louisiana House of Representatives. In 1873, he was elected as the first mayor of Tangipahoa. He served for two years, and in 1875, he was elected to the Louisiana Senate.