Livingston Parish continues rapid growth

Livingston Parish is one of the rapidly growing areas in the state, with most of that growth occurring in the last several years. The population of the parish has increased over 100% since 1980, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

Livingston Parish has a number of factors that contribute to its rapid growth, including its location along the I-12 corridor, its proximity to Baton Rouge, and its relatively low cost of living. The parish has also invested in infrastructure development, such as new schools and roads, which has attracted new residents.

One of the most significant developments in Livingston Parish is the expansion of the Baton Rouge Metropolitan Area, which includes the parish. This has led to a surge in new home construction and businesses, driving up the demand for goods and services.

The parish has a number of attractions that draw visitors and residents alike, including the historic town of Denham Springs, the scenic beauty of Lake Maurepas, and the cultural events held in the parish's many communities.

Livingston Parish is a great place to live, work, and play, and its rapid growth is likely to continue in the years to come.
