The Smiles are for Acadian country, which Margaret Lingemann just visited at the suggestion of Monsignor Luigi Ligutti of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, one of the founders of the International Catholic Migration Commission, for which Margaret worked in Geneva for many years. Dean Thomas Arceneaux, a close friend of Monsignor Ligutti, national director of the NCRLC and widely traveled in Europe, France, and Madagascar, Africa, for the U.S. government, was joined in a discussion of immigration and DP problems with Miss Lingemann by Elizabeth McGee of the Grail, international laywomen's movement deeply concerned with world population problems, and Esther Brunet, religious vice president of the S.L.I. Newman Club, who has stimulated considerable interest in the missions and in migrant workers, NCWC Catholic Relief Services have done much for immigrants, as has the International Catholic Charities Association in Rome, helping people from Germany, Italy, Spain, and the Soviet satellite countries. Margaret feels the U.S.A. has much room for its people, while Europe is densely populated. Her visit was to help her learn about American people and their potentials, and to plan assistance for the Church and Catholic refugees in Germany through clothing, books, support for priests, etc.
