BUTTE LAROSE — Just two months ago, Butte LaRose was a ghost town, with few people around except for law enforcement and St. Martin Parish officials patrolling with the Arkansas National Guard. But today, things have changed, and residents of this small town are returning to their homes and campsites to enjoy the natural beauty of the area.

The town has a population of about 500, and residents say they are happy to be back. "It's like a new beginning," said one resident.

The town's恢复 has been slow but steady, with people slowly returning to their homes and campsites to enjoy the natural beauty of the area. Some residents have been able to return to their homes and are attempting to clean up and repair damage caused by the flood.

As the town begins to open up again, residents are expressing their gratitude for the help they received during the flood. "We're really grateful for the help we received," said one resident. "It was a tough time, but we made it through."
