J. W. Faulk became superintendent of Lafayette Parish public schools in 1922, and continued in that capacity until his death in 1942. For 20 years he carried the torch of public school education straight ahead, with the system showing admirable gains during his superintendency. Leo L. Judice, who was president of the Lafayette Parish School Board for a period of 27 years, carried on a tradition of deep interest in public school education which had been established by his father, Alcide Judice, the first president of the Lafayette Parish School board. Both hold high positions in Lafayette’s Hall of Fame, for their untiring interest in public education during the decades in which they figured so prominently in those endeavors.
