Moss, Mud, and Architecture

Personalized Planning

Daily Advertiser
September 28, 1968

By DAVID L. PERKINS
AIA Architect

In the towns and cities of Acadiana today, there are more individual organizations trying to do something about the problem of planning than ever before in history.

Except for the work of professionally staffed official and quasi-official agencies whose efforts are cross-referenced and coordinated, too much voluntary effort is lost. These efforts are lost because the people who have felt strongly enough about the problem to initiate action have not always known the best way to proceed in seeking a solution.