Turner attacks networks for emphasis on sex and violence

R.E. "Ted" Turner, chairman of the board and president of the Turner Broadcasting System, is creating a furor with the launching of CNN. He did it by striking the networks for their "emphasizing violence and sex," and urging the public to demand programs that emphasize the true values that made this country great.

Gerald E. Sturry, West Virginia University football coach, said Sunday in a letter to the Charleston Gazette that Turner doesn't have the nerve to watch the networks as they are today, and they are rejecting Turner on that basis.

Feeling that the central problem is: what should be the kind of people our children are? should be the kind of people our children are becoming and they are rejecting Turner for that reason as much as the ability, and ability to do violence and sex.

Turner feels that all the other people don't have a nerve.

Myths about aging explored on radio

V tackled the question of how aging is being explored on radio, which has a much more complex set of audience demographics than television. He noted that radio has a younger audience than television, and that it is often used as a source of information by older people. He also discussed the importance of community radio stations in providing a platform for younger voices.

The program discussed the concept of a "frail" and "normal" older population. According to Dr. R. W. Kridler, director of the Center for Research on Aging and Development at the University of Minnesota, the "normal" older population is not the same as the "frail" older population. He noted that many older people are able to lead active and fulfilling lives.

"We find that the majority of older people are healthy, self-sufficient, self-supporting, and self-adjusted" said Dr. Kridler.

"A number of employees, especially in small business, are not the same as the healthy, self-sufficient, self-adjusted people who are the majority of older people."}

---

Planned events for weekend

- Saturday, September 18:
  - 7 p.m.: Oklahoma State at Tulane.

- Sunday, September 19:
  - Noon: Natchitoches High School football.
  - 7 p.m.: Louisiana-Lafayette at LSU.

---

Advertisement for "The Morning Star"

For Free Estimate Call 984-5212

---

The Morning Star

Wednesday, August 11, 1982