Pro-choice and pro-life proponents tell their stories

Judy Loftin risks health to defend clinic

By EDWARD PEAULT
Advocate staff writer

Loftin, 38, said she was surprised at the small crowd. She held an American flag and a sign that read, "Pro-life, not pro-death." She said she was there to show support for the clinic.

Loftin said she was worried about her health and safety as she approached the clinic. She said she had been to the clinic several times before and had never had any problems.

Loftin said she was willing to risk her health and safety to defend the clinic. She said she would continue to come to the clinic and support it as long as she could.

Susan Burke battles to block abortions

By GREG GARLAND
Advocate staff writer

Susan Burke, 38, said she was determined to stop the clinic from performing abortions. She said she had been to the clinic several times before and had never had any problems.

Burke said she was willing to risk her health and safety to defend the clinic. She said she would continue to come to the clinic and support it as long as she could.
An aerial view looking west shows the Delta Women's Clinic in the middle with the two areas of protest at the gates to the clinic in the upper left and the lower right. The white cars are police units and the vehicles at the top left are television satellite trucks.