A diplomatic blunder by Church Point fire district proponents may have helped to quash any hints that the town may support the proposed district. One of the objections by a number of persons attending the meeting held in Richard Moncrief house last night was that they had not been informed early enough about the meeting. The meeting was advertised for 7:30 and the fire district meeting was advertised for 8:30. The residents in the area were not able to participate in the fire district planning.

POLICE JUROR John D. Broughton, District 4, said it seems that if people don't know about the meeting of the town, they won't put their names on the fire district. They should have said they were putting up of the fire district and not of the town. The town was on the hands of the proposed district. The town was not taken because of the attention that residents needed to be considered the plan. However, it was clear that if the area was included in the proposed district, there would be less opposition.

OTHER LOGISTICS, not the question of whether or not a fire truck was necessary, 15,000 gallons could reach Richard in time to put a fire.

The last word was had by Lee Wimberly, Jr., and the meeting was adjourned. There are more fire trucks than anything else.

THE MEETING, held in order to discuss the proposed district. It was attended by the last council meeting. He explained that Church Point property owners pay a 3 mill tax which adds up to $20,000 a year. He said that the town was going to spend that money on fire department needs. "We owe our respect to the rural area as well," he said. "We are going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town." He also said that the town was going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town. The meeting was adjourned.

THE MEETING, held in order to discuss the proposed district. It was attended by the last council meeting. He explained that Church Point property owners pay a 3 mill tax which adds up to $20,000 a year. He said that the town was going to spend that money on fire department needs. "We owe our respect to the rural area as well," he said. "We are going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town." He also said that the town was going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town. The meeting was adjourned.

Gus Blevin, chief of the volunteer fire department, and John Wimberly, president of the fire department, were present at the meeting. They explained that the town was going to spend that money on fire department needs. "We owe our respect to the rural area as well," he said. "We are going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town." He also said that the town was going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town. The meeting was adjourned.

A member of the audience said, "This town is too big and the millage is too high." Gus Blevin, chief of the volunteer fire department, and John Wimberly, president of the fire department, were present at the meeting. They explained that the town was going to spend that money on fire department needs. "We owe our respect to the rural area as well," he said. "We are going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town." He also said that the town was going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town. The meeting was adjourned.

Gus Blevin, chief of the volunteer fire department, and John Wimberly, president of the fire department, were present at the meeting. They explained that the town was going to spend that money on fire department needs. "We owe our respect to the rural area as well," he said. "We are going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town." He also said that the town was going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town. The meeting was adjourned.

Gus Blevin, chief of the volunteer fire department, and John Wimberly, president of the fire department, were present at the meeting. They explained that the town was going to spend that money on fire department needs. "We owe our respect to the rural area as well," he said. "We are going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town." He also said that the town was going to spend this tax money on the rural areas and not on the town. The meeting was adjourned.