What Happened:

By The Associated Press

It was 4:09 a.m., July 11, 1982, in Miami Beach, and Pan Am Flight 759 was minutes from lifting off. The Boeing 727's engines were roaring like a thousand thunderheads.

Then, suddenly, the plane dived into a residential area. It smashed into two houses, one of which was the Upsala apartment building in Miami Beach. The impact knocked out the back door and its windows. The plane then crashed into a third house, a two-story brick structure.

The scene was one of chaos and destruction. People were trapped in the rubble. Some were screaming for help. Others were crying.

The investigation began immediately. Agents from the National Transportation Safety Board and the Federal Aviation Administration were on the scene. They started to piece together the puzzle of what had happened.

But for reasons no one yet understands, the plane veered off course. It hit its nose right on down the runway and into the trees. The impact caused a huge explosion, sending debris flying in all directions.

The plane was destroyed, and so was most of the crew and passengers.

The crash was a tragedy. It was a moment of horror. And it was a moment that would never be forgotten.
