environment
State seeks new basin funding

According to the President, the Atchafalaya Basin is an area of significant environmental and recreational value. The state is considering alternative funding sources in order to secure the necessary funds for the purchase of land in the basin. Without federal funding, the state may have to rely on private donations or other sources to complete the land acquisition program.

The Atchafalaya Basin is located in the state of Louisiana and is known for its diverse wildlife and natural beauty. The state has set a goal of acquiring 40,000 acres of land in the basin by the end of the current fiscal year.

It is important to note that the state's ability to secure funding for the Atchafalaya Basin is dependent on the outcome of the upcoming election. The state's Governor, Dave Treen, has met with President Reagan in an effort to secure federal funding for the project. Without federal funding, the state may have to delay the project for at least a year.

In summary, the state of Louisiana is seeking new funding sources for the Atchafalaya Basin project. The outcome of the upcoming election will play a significant role in determining whether or not the project can move forward as planned.