She's a real storyteller

Storyteller 'Tante Terresa' aka Thelma Daigle of Scott

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle growing up, but she asks, "I had a dry sense of humor and she never laughed at my own stories - she only laughed at my re-telling of someone else's stories."

"Any Cajun...the Cajun joke was always different..."told Thelma, as the sound of her voice filled the air, "That's what the Cajun joke was all about, making fun of someone else, it was a way of life."

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle grew up in a big house near Church Point and learned all about Cajun culture and storytelling. Many of her stories were inspired by her family, like her father, who was a storyteller and a musician.

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle grew up in a big house near Church Point and learned all about Cajun culture and storytelling. Many of her stories were inspired by her family, like her father, who was a storyteller and a musician.

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle grew up in a big house near Church Point and learned all about Cajun culture and storytelling. Many of her stories were inspired by her family, like her father, who was a storyteller and a musician.

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle grew up in a big house near Church Point and learned all about Cajun culture and storytelling. Many of her stories were inspired by her family, like her father, who was a storyteller and a musician.

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle grew up in a big house near Church Point and learned all about Cajun culture and storytelling. Many of her stories were inspired by her family, like her father, who was a storyteller and a musician.

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle grew up in a big house near Church Point and learned all about Cajun culture and storytelling. Many of her stories were inspired by her family, like her father, who was a storyteller and a musician.

"I always got a kick out of telling funny stories and entertaining friends in my Church Point women's group. The Cajun Ladies. Then one day, the group's leader strongly suggested I enter the Opelousas Cajun Joke Telling Contest."

Thelma Daigle grew up in a big house near Church Point and learned all about Cajun culture and storytelling. Many of her stories were inspired by her family, like her father, who was a storyteller and a musician.