LAFAYETTE, La. - Several hundred Louisiana teen-agers will spend five weeks in Quebec this summer to learn conversational French in a two-phase program which has been arranged by the Council for the Development of French in Louisiana and the Quebec government.

The program's phases include one in a college setting and the other in a camp environment. High school juniors may earn up to five hours of college credit. Both phases will be for five weeks, James Donmengueaux, CODOFIL chairman, said.

Louisiana students in the study program will be enrolled in the College de Jonquiers on Lake St. John, north of Quebec City. Those in the visitation program will be in a recreational camp near Montreal. Those in the study group will have five hours of instruction daily and those in the visitation program will receive three hours of instruction daily.

Both programs will be under the complete supervision of educational and religious personnel of the Quebec government.

One group will depart June 20 and return July 26 and the second contingent is to leave for Quebec July 26 and return Aug. 24. Students between the ages of 12 and 19 are eligible to participate and must enroll with CODOFIL in Lafayette prior to May 15.
